Very nice game, good linux run.. Very interesting looking fantastically sounding rogue-like. With lack of any in-depth mechanics and tons of wasted potential.

Heavily relies on knowing outcome of random events that were designed to screw the player over.

Heavy RNG based, regarding to drops, stores, OP enemy ships spawns. Player can always take precaution against those, doesn't mean next thing after barely surviving a battle will be a spawn of even stronger ship.

Only 2-3 battle strategies are viable. FTL lacks any in-depth mechanics to outplay your enemies based on the equipment, weaponry etc.

No matter how much shield and dodge player's ship has it's irrelevant when you get shot at by flak + missile and you miss all of your shots simultaneously. And this happens quite a lot.

Even with heavy modding of the game, the whole RNG makes the game absolute tedium.

FTL simply is not hard because of how much you have to learn, but because if you were to play without a in-depth guide knowing all chances and outcomes and having extremely good spawns for powerful weapons - even "Easy" is most of the time absolutely unbeatable.

Fantastic base for the actually immersive text-adventure esc roguelike, but extremely undeveloped with depth of a puddle.

I wouldn't recommend playing the game to 90% of people, it can allegedly be satisfying to get out of hopeless situation, but in my eyes when it's happening almost every time and you have to use same tactics over and over and over and lose your progress to something that isn't your fault...It' doesnt quite seem right.

If you don't consider yourself a lucky person don't even bother. The only people who will get enjoyment out of this - who appreciate fantastic OST and design of the game, or people who like to read and memorize in-depth guides with +100 tips because RNG is that awful.. This game is stupid and RNG is horrible, just a waste of time and money honestly...

As soon as you update something, the enemy get same update right away! Its not a strategy game its juts another slot machine.. I hate this game.. I spent so long trying to beat it only to have dumb things kill all of my crew. One hint told me that fire doesn't damage the hull of a ship, it's a lie so I lost half of my crew because I Teleported them over to the enemies ship and cease shooting at it only to have it blow up and my guys died.

I've lost complete games because a ship will offer me "5 Fuel, 10 Rockets, 57 Scrap.. and a Lazer Beam weapon" just so I didn't kill them.. So I thought I'll go over there and kill them all and strip the ship without destroying it.. it gave me "2 Fuel, 1 Rocket, 13 Scrap" and said that I had stripped it clean.. Where is the weapon!? Where is the scrap! It's just a random piece of crap game with no storyline and no logical sense of what things you can take from a ship.

Also, look up online on how many people actually beat this game.. some people have been playing it for years and still can't do it. It's because no matter how the game makes you think that you have a choice in what weapons you put on your ship, the end guys get so hard that you have to do it all in a specific order to beat it. What a joke.. So, I've had this game for years and put in a ton of time. It's perfect. I have 0 problems with any aspect of this game. The art, the music, the gameplay, the difficulty, it all just works perfectly. I'll admit, I have only beaten it a few times, but it's one of those games where most of the time, I know it was my fault for my deaths. A few times it was just a situation of nothing I could do, but most of the time, it was my own mismanagement. And that is fine by me. I can accept losing when I know it's on me, and not the game just being unfair. Forever recommend this game.. A great little game. Game is very unfair with the RNG blatantly rigged to the AI's favor. It is a luck based game that will often punish a player for choosing a particular strategy. For example, if you happen across a cloak module and opt towards a cloaking style strategy, you can expect to find nothing but nebulas and pulsars which constantly disable your power and cloak modules, rendering the 150 scrap and power you've invested useless.

If you opt towards an offensive strategy, with lots of weapons and heavy investment into weapon power, fully expect ALL enemies moving forwards to have at least level two shields AS WELL as a super shield, once again negating the investment you've made into that strategy. Also expect to miss 90% of your shots, because reasons. No exaggeration here. consistently 7/8 laser beams will miss. No way to work around this either, bad DEV decision IMO

Going for a boarding style build? Forget about it! You won't get enough scrap for it nor will you be able to purchase\find the modules and crew members, the cost to benefit ratio is off and it's NEVER rewarding enough, and even if you manage to acquire the scrap and crew members needed to do this build, surprise! all enemies now have cloaking and hacking enabled, and will always target your teleporter DESPITE NOT HAVING THE SENSORS\CREW TO DO SO. Once again, no ability to negate or avoid this, it just happens, and it's super lame every time it does, which is often.

Enemy ships will "somehow manage" to FTL jump away with valuable scrap\resources on board. Of course, this only happens once you've used 4 missiles trying to prevent the jump. Disabling a ships engine is supposed to prevent this, but alas, RNG steps in and makes sure you're punished appropriately for making a decision.

Nebulas are a terrible idea and you can expect to be forced into atleast three straight sectors of nebulas if you have anything useful moving into the second and third sectors.

Basically, the game is really neat and cool and fun until you actually figure out how it works, and then you just realize that it's just yet another lame RNG rigged game that removes skill and decision making aspects and replaces them with these ridiculous "OOoof better luck next time.... PLAY THE GAME MOAAAAR" ideologies that just breaks videogames all together. I get that games are supposed to be challenging and there is and should strong pros and cons to every decision but this game is just really unfair and likes to \u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665 over the player "just because" and it's happened consistantly enough that it's made me want to leave a review, because i'm really soured by this experience and thought this was a neat fun indie game. I was wrong. It's just another lame cellphone time waster \u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665t RNG

The RNG here is ridiculous.

Invested in cloak module, had full crew with 30% dodge and six power bars on weapons system. Was overall well off.

Missed seventeen lasers in a row.

Died to a drone.. I HATE THIS GAME.

No i don't, I was just losing another round.

The game is just about perfect, go get it if you're into rogue-likes, there's hardly anything better than this one.. Finally beat this game after 150+ hours (after having given up the first time).

As a huge sci-fi fan, I like being the captain of a ship. As a gamer, I dislike dying. Apparently dying is part of the fun?

You're not going to find a better spaceship game. If you do, please let me know.. Epic space simulator game. Oh my goodness is it difficult (on easy setting) and exciting. So much replay value. worth every penny. :). Worst game I've ever bought (I even have broken games exponentially better than this trash). So, I like to play games are hard mode or higher if possible, and I expect to struggle and take a few reruns to get over it and figure out how to do things. Well this steamy pile of shit is unwinnable on hard mode! Never enough scrap to upgrade the vitals, the RNG factor is largest pile of dogshit I've ever seen (40% evasion early on and ever goddamn time a missile hits my weapons system and sets it on fire with 2+ fires that spread rapidly sinking my ship in the process). Then, I never get a store when I actually have extra scrap to get a different weapon other than the starter weapon. The strategy is for hard to cut power to medbay and O2 when u can to power the upgraded engines to increase miss chance, but how does that work if 40% evade doesn't do anything while an automated drone in sector 4 has 2 attack drones (which don't miss), level 2 shields + burst laser 1 and has a higher evade chance than me apparently? It doesn't, you just get killed over every time. If you try and get level 2 shields and the power for them, the enemies still have better weapons and you can't even afford to replenish your missiles, yet alone get a different weapon. In every aspect of the word broken is this game. Hell, Darkest Dungeon on bloodmoon mode is more fair than this. In conclusion, I cannot stress this enough that this game sucks and is a huge waste of money, spend it on something that is actually beatable.. The game is all about luck. And that's it. Not very interesting.
